Job Summary: The Health and Wellness Promoter is a health and wellness champion, promoting positive change in the community. This role is responsible for group-based programming, health promotion education and community development activities that help people feel their best – physically, mentally, emotionally, and socially. As part of the Community Health Team, this role is about meeting people where they are at and making wellness feel possible, accessible and even fun.

Why work here:

- Monday-Friday
- Employer Paid Benefits
- HOOPP Pension
- Collaborative Team Culture
- Values Driven Decision Making
- Trauma-Informed Approach

Key Areas of Responsibility:

- Design, coordinate and assist in delivering health promotion strategies at the Centre (e.g. skill building and health education, advocacy, individual and community capacity building through empowerment and community development)
- Champion health and wellbeing, raise awareness on issues that affect physical, mental, emotional and social wellbeing and advocate on behalf of community members affected by those issues
- Participate in social prescribing initiatives, connecting individuals to activities that promote wellbeing and social connection
- Engage with the community, with a focus on priority populations, to identify needs, strengths, interests and opportunities to promote wellness in all its forms, including physical, mental and social wellbeing
- Develop, implement, monitor and evaluate community development initiatives that promote health and wellness through a strengths-based approach and foster peer-to-peer connection and social inclusion
- Plan, organize and facilitate or co-facilitate group programming and educational activities that reflect the needs, strengths and interests of our community
- Work closely with individuals, groups, and organizations to identify needs, develop resources, and implement programs that address key health and wellness issues in our community
